

Board approval. The IPO process begins with a proposal to the company's board of directors by management of the company. Management presents and discusses in detail the company's past performance, objectives, business plan, and financial projections. Management then proposes that the company enter the public market. After carefully considering the benefits and detriments of going public, the board of directors makes a decision as to whether the IPO should go forward.