

Syndication. After the preliminary prospectus has been prepared and filed with the SEC, the investment bank should assemble a "syndicate" consisting of other investment banks who will attempt to sell portions of the offering to investors. The assembly of the syndicate often generates useful information as to the market for the shares and helps to narrow the share price range.